

Worcester Friends were probably buried initially in gardens, but when the Friar Street site was purchased, a burial ground was opened there. The Friar Street burial ground continued in occasional use until well into the eighteenth century. It is now covered by a car park.

There is no map showing the location of the first burials at the Sansome Fields site; it is possible that the 'first' burial ground [now the car park] was used to begin with, and that it was used again in the nineteenth century. This may be borne out by the fact that the earliest burial recorded on a plan in 1732, is in this ground, and that it was described as the Old Graveyard c1780. The large ground was opened in 1770.

The burial register states that the first person to be buried in the 'New burial ground' [the second burial ground] was Ann Becket in 1769 [?1770]

A minute of the disbursement committee in 1844 comments on the crowded state of the burial grounds, but they decided to take no action.

In 1849, a report to the General Board of Health by George Thomas Clark states that:

The Friends - this burial ground is situated in Sansome Walk. One portion is full, and is not used at present; the other still contains some room for additional graves. Each grave is 3 feet by 7 feet, and no grave is less than 6 feet deep. Not more than two coffins are placed in the same grave, except in the case of children; when a grave is intended to hold more than one body it is made about 9 feet deep at first. There is a plan of the ground.

A minute of Worcester PM on 9th 1st month 1859, reports that Friends who attended a meeting held by the Commissioner respecting the state of the Burial Grounds, thought that there was no probability that Friends would be restrained from using for interments, either their present burial ground or the piece of ground formerly used as a garden. [this garden is shown on the mid- eighteenth century plan of the meeting house and its grounds, and became the third burial ground]

They told the Commissioner that there were 450 square yards of vacant ground, amply sufficient for 193 single graves. "The graves are about 7 feet deep and some 8 and 10 feet and there is more than 5 feet of earth between the top of each coffin and the surface of the ground."

The burial plans do not show any burials between 1852 and 1855, but there were several recorded in the registers as taking place at Sansome Place during that time.

When the gravedigger made the last three graves in the 1990s, he came across evidence of coffins at the east end of the third burial ground, and considered that they were of some age. There are no graves recorded in this location on the plan in the record office, and the area was used as a garden until the mid nineteenth century. Is it possible that this site was used by Friends when they first opened the meeting house in 1701 (there are no burial plans extant for this early period), or were bodies moved there when the Victorian meeting house was built at the west end of the first burial ground c1832?

Third burial ground 1855 - present

This burial ground is to the left of the path leading up to the Meeting House from Sansome Place, it contains a few gravestones for later burials, but there are many not marked by a memorial. This burial ground was the last to be in use before closure in 1993. The more recent trend toward cremation means that although some interred ashes are marked, there are others which are only recorded in the book of orders for burial kept by the Worcester Preparative Meeting. This also applies to Friends who were buried or cremated elsewhere, for example at Astwood Cemetery.

There are some unrecorded burials at the east end of this burial ground, possibly of a date around the time of the building of the Meeting House in 1701. Two gravestones at the east end of the ground were moved there from the small burial ground when the new flats were constructed c1980, they refer to A13 and A14. At the same time, bones discovered in the same area, were re-buried in the area in a line between the bay kitchen window of 1 Friends Mews, and the wall bordering on Sansome Place. The identities of the various remains are not known.
